A love for the Hawaiian Island's influenced the choices that the clients made for the finishes in this bath remodel. The original bath was outdated, with a tiny shower. The closet access to the main bath was closed off to add more shower wall space. The shower re-do included soap niches, bench, body sprays, handheld shower and a pebble floor. The back-to-back mirrors were kept from the original design.

The former finishes in this hall bath were removed to accommodate the clients' request for a more organic contemporary look to match the rest of their home. The existing salt-tile was retained. Sleek plumbing fixtures and stone tile detail of the backsplash and shower surround echoes that in the kitchen, which is adjacent to the bath. The walls were retextured with a smooth finish. Updated ventilation and recessed lighting were added.

The desire to have a pizza oven drove the decision to renovate this formerly unused space. It had no overhang to protect from the oven, seating and garden. The revised space complements the Santa Fe architecture but still maintains an Italian influence. Added to the Pizza Courtyard were a Bocce court, all-weather ambience and task lighting, and a tortoise enclosure.

The front entry to a home is one of its most important features. For this grand 7,000-square-foot home, the designer needed to create an equally grand double door. Surrounding the entrance, concrete pavers trimmed with pre-cast molding were precision cut to form niches. Naturally warm walnut travertine was the perfect complement to the forged black iron of the doors.

To maintain the light source for the walk-in shower but provide privacy without using glass block, the designer commissioned a beautiful stained-glass window inspired by a tapestry in the owner's collection. The art glass is sandwiched between a storefront window on the outside for protection and a glass panel on the inside that is set flush to the surrounding tile, making it easy to clean and maintain. HG
